[double rule]

AN ANTIQUARY

I<sup>2</sup>s one that has his Being in this Age, but his Life and Conversation is in the Days of old. He despifes the present Age as an Innovation, and flights the future; but has a great Value for that, which is paft and gone, like the Madman, that fell in Love with Cleopatra. He is an old frippery-Philosopher, that has fo ftrange a natural Affection to worm-eaten Speculation, that it is apparent he has a Worm in his Skull. He honours his Forefathers and Fore-mothers, but condemns his Parents as too modern, and no better than Upftarts. He neglects himfelf, because he was born in his own Time, and fo far off Antiquity, which he fo much admires; and repines, like a younger Brother, because he came so late into the World. He fpends the one half of his Time in collecting old infignificant Trifles, and the other in fhewing them, which he takes fingular Delight in; because the oftener he does it, the further they are from being new to him. All his Curiousities take place of one another according to their Seniority, and he values them not by their Abilities, but their Standing. He has a great Veneration for Words that are stricken in Years, and are grown so aged, that they have out-lived their Employments—These he uses with a Respect agreeable to their Antiquity, and the good Services they have done. He throws away his Time in enquiring after that which is past and gone so many Ages since, like one that shoots away an Arrow, to find out another that was lost before. He fetches things out of Duft and Ruins, like the Fable of the chymical Plant raifed out of its own Afhes. He values one old Invention, that is loft and never to be recovered, before all the new ones in the World, tho' never fo ufeful. The whole Bufinefs of his Life is the fame with his, that fhows the Tombs at Westminster, only the one does it for his Pleafure, and the other for Money. As every Man has but one Father, but two Grand-Fathers and a World of Anceftors; fo he has a proportional Value for Things that are antient, and the further off the greater.

He is a great Time-ferver, but it is of Time out of Mind, to which he conforms exactly, but is wholly retied from the prefent. His Days were fpent and gone long before he came into the World, and fince his only Bufiness is to collect what he can out of the Ruins of them. He has fo ftrong a natural Affection to any Thing that is old, that he may truly fay to Duft and Worms you are my Father, and to Rottenness thou are my Mother. He has no Providence nor Fore-fight; for all his Contemplations look backward upon the Days of old, and his Brains are turned with them, as if he walked backwards. He had rather interpret one obfcure Word in any old fenfelefs Difcourfe, than be the Author of the most ingenious new one; and with Scaliger would fell the Empire of Germany<sup>1</sup> (if it were in his Power) for an old Song. He devours an old Manufcript with greater Relifh than Worms and Moths do, and, though there be nothing in it, values

And with Scaliger would fell the Empire of Germany] This alludes to a ranting Exclamation of Scaliger's upon an Ode in Horace, which he was particularly pleased with.

it above any Thing printed, which he accounts but a Novelty. When he happens to cure a fmall Botch in an old Author, he is as proud of it, as if he had got the Philosophers Stone, and could cure all the Diseases of Mankind. He values things wrongfully upon their Antiquity, forgetting that the most modern are really the most ancient of all Things in the World, like those that reckon their Pounds before their Shillings and Pence, of which they are made up. He esteems no Customs but such as have outlived themselves, and are long since out of Use; as the Catholics allow of no Saints, but such as are dead, and the Fanatics, Opposition, of none but the Living.